Azaleas in Bloom at MIDDLETON PLACE

Middleton Place is located along the Ashley River near Charleston and is home to America's oldest landscaped gardens. The Gardens are home to more than 100,000 azaleas planted over 65 landscaped acres that were introduced to the property during the Antebellum period, and they will be at their peak of blooming when we go!

Middleton Place was once the residence of Arthur Middleton, a signer of the Declaration of Independence. We will visit the House Museum which explores the Revolutionary era through the lives of Arthur Middleton, his family, and the people they enslaved.

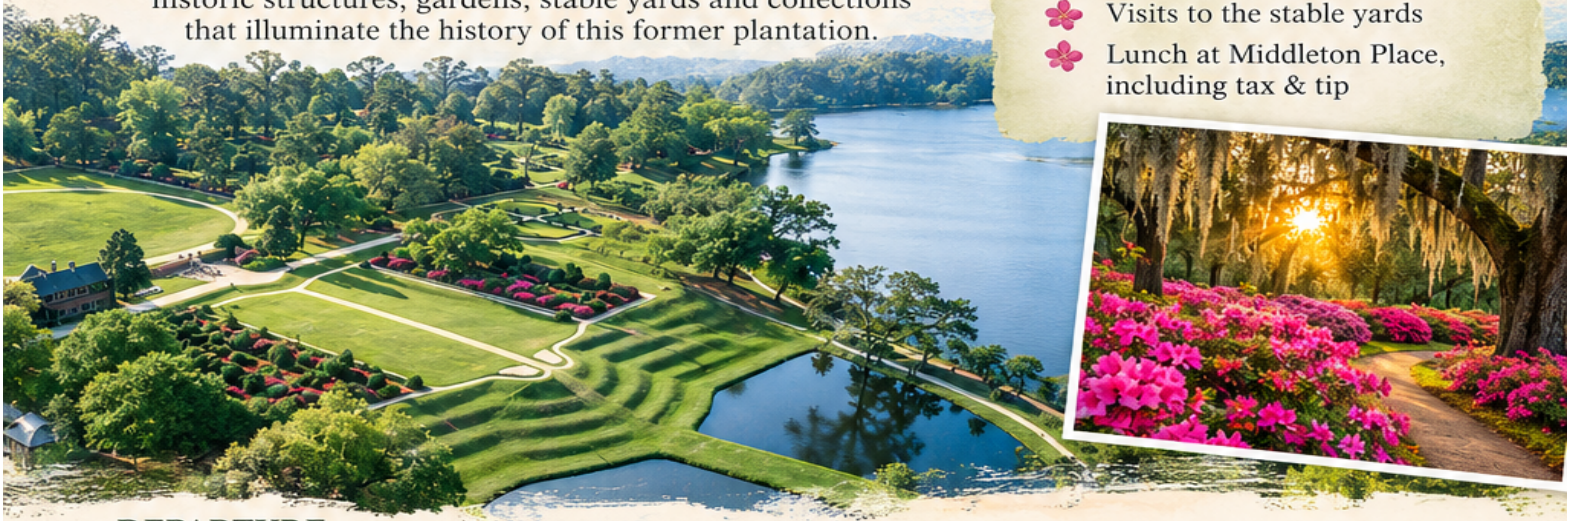

There will be time to explore America's Oldest Landscaped Gardens and see the contributions of Europeans, enslaved Africans and African Americans. The site also encompasses historic structures, gardens, stable yards and collections that illuminate the history of this former plantation.
